Mozilla, I want to work for you because:

I aspire to be a positive force in developing technologies for the open web.

Mozilla's mission statement resounds with my personal directive to enable others by improving modern technologies. In my past positions, I would strive to find avenues that would simultaneously achieve my requirements in the workplace as well as improve the quality of open source projects like ELF parsers, Redis database wrappers, and various API client libraries. As a Mozilla engineer, I will be well-equipted to further the cause while collaborating with like-minded, world-class engineers.

I learn best by getting my hands dirty, especially with others.

Making small victories in the open source world has taught me how to introduce changes as grainularly, gracefully, and efficiently as possible. Working at Sifteo taught me how to release builds without abandoning older clients, and making intelligent decisions on implementations for new features while handling backwards compatibility. I've learned valuable lessons from my work experience, and I look forward to learning more at Mozilla, where the scale is larger and the products are ambitious.

I take pride in my work, and I am driven to make it the best it can be.

Owning every facet of my work is a necessity for personal success; I continually desire to build bigger and better systems that run faster and with more reslience. In a search of constant personal improvment, I seek an organization that can provide these oppertunities, and Mozilla fits the bill.

Thank you for your consideration.
